OurEarth.org's 8-week summer internship program provides students with many unique opportunities:

Leadership Development

Receive an academic introduction to leadership principles, assess your own skills, and discover opportunities for growth using the Six Domains model of leadership – developed by Duke University professors, Allan Lind and Sim Sitkin. Visit DeltaLeadership.com for more Six Domains information.

Environmental Education

Listen to guest speakers from the non-profit, academic, and business communities discuss a wide variety of environmental and social entrepreneurship topics.

Grassroots Activism

Join a coalition of students who are striving to create significant environmental changes.

Teams

Work closely with students from around the country. In 2010, our interns came from 30 different colleges.

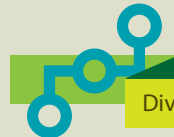

Flexibility

Don't worry about moving for just a couple months in the summer. Work from home, your campus, or another location; plus its environmentally-friendly to avoid daily commutes.

Entrepreneurship

Active involvement in the development of a start-up environmental organization. Propose ideas, learn how a young organization functions, and interact with top management.

Diverse Projects

Students are not assigned to a specific group or topic but instead focus on a number of different activities. Some of the possible projects include newsletter development, internet research, marketing, and strategic planning. Environmental topics are equally as diverse and include recycling, green jobs, and organic foods, just to name a few.

OurEarth.org is a national 501(c)3 non-profit organization. Its mission is to engage, empower, and nurture current and future environmental leaders by providing access to information. OurEarth.org combines a novel combination of grassroots activism, education, and internet technology to achieve its goals. At the heart of the organization is the OurEarth.org website which is a community-driven portal for environmental programs, activities, and resources.
